Farwest Corrosion Locations | Farwest Corrosion Control ... Cathodic Protection Methods While there are many geometric variations on how a cathodic protection system can be installed, there are just two basic methods of applying cathodic protection. The first method is commonly called sacrificial anode cathodic protection and uses galvanic anodes to deliver smaller amounts of DC current to the structure. Corrosion Engineering Consulting | Chicago IL The simplest method of cathodic protection is galvanic protection where a metal of different electrochemical potential is used as a "sacrificial" anode. For larger structures, galvanic anodes cannot deliver enough current to provide complete protection.
