Editors Generally speaking, thermal spray technologies [21–25] can be classified according to the type of their main energy sources (Fig. 9.1); among them, plasma spraying is the most widely used technology for surfacing implants with highly osteointegrating coatings. A plasma spray device consists of a power supply, a control unit for the regulation of gas, cooling water, a powder supply system, and a plasma-generating gun, as well as other auxiliary equipment. Thermal Spray Technology - an overview | ScienceDirect Topics The plasma spray-physical vapor deposition (PS-PVD) process is a promising method to manufacture thermal barrier coatings (TBCs). It fills the gap between traditional thermal spray processes and electron beam physical vapor deposition (EB-PVD). The durability of PS-PVD manufactured columnar TBCs is strongly influenced by the compatibility of the metallic bondcoat (BC) and the ceramic TBC.
